6. Read the following paragraph:

As president, George Washington had to set a policy for dealing with Native Americans. The quotation below is taken from a letter Washington wrote in 1783. It is about the Six (Indian) Nations of New York. Read the quotation carefully.

It is my opinion, that, if the legislature of the State of New York should insist upon expelling the Six Nations, it will end in another Indian war. I have every reason to believe from the information I have received that they will not allow their Country ... to be taken away from them without another struggle. That they would compromise for a part of it I have very little doubt ... The same, I am sure, will hold true with respect to Virginia, or any other State, which has powerful tribes of Indians on their Frontiers.

I am clear in my opinion, that policy and economy point very strongly to the usefulness of being upon good terms with the Indians, and the correctness of purchasing their lands instead of attempting to drive them by force of arms out of their Country. There is nothing to be obtained by an Indian war, but the soil they live on, and this can be had by purchase at less expense.

7. What caused the Indian attacks on the frontier in the 1790's?

8. How did Washington deal with this problem?

9. List 5 crises that Washington faced and tell how he solved each. Did Washington address these challenges effectively?
